Bits and Pieces:

The FAA has officially recognized the Internet as an official source of information - if the source is a "Qualified Internet Communication Provider" (QICP). They will provide a listing of all QICPs on a page in www.faa.gov.

This means it is legal to plan flights using NOTAMs, weather and TFRs from these sources. AOPA has been a moving force in this matter.

AOPA's website has such data;

there are also TFRs and NOTAMs at www.aeroplanner.com; the map of TFRs is at map.aerochart.com/mapping/TFR.cfm.

There are lists of ADs at: av-info.faa.gov/ad/AD.htm, and av-info.faa.gov/stc has STCs.

EAA's Joe Norris at 888-322-4636 ext. 4821 or at infoserve@eaa.org has up-to-date info on Rotax engines and what works for them.

www.JagHelicopter.com tells you about their turbine helicopter kit for around $125,000.

Vertical Aviation Technologies is offering a four-place helicopter kit using a special IO-540 engine for around $140,000.

Zoche (www.zoche.de) in Germany, is developing some diesel aircraft engines that are lighter than normal and have very good fuel consumption (0.357 lb/hr/HP).
