Smoothing Out the Road

(Photos by Larry Rengstorf)

Speed limit 15 MPH

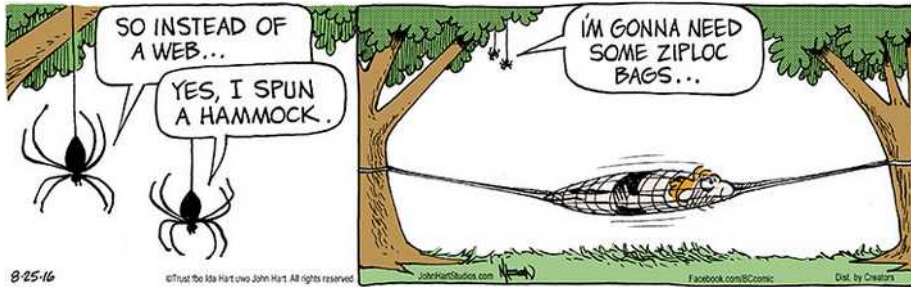

After some smoothing it looked like this:

A little research on the Web reveals that new blacktop (asphalt) is delicate. It can take most of a year to cure. Larry is rightly concerned that we treat our new driveway gently while it cures.

Please avoid extremely heavy or extremely hard items that might poke a hole like construction dumpsters or metal tracked vehicles. For most of us, keeping our speed down while driving on the new surface will help prevent damage.

Just like any youngster, a new asphalt driveway needs TLC, please take it easy on the turns.

News / Notes From the Editor:

Dealing with the unfamiliar

Did you ever find that around every corner was something new and unfamiliar? For some reason, it is happening for me. The company where I have been working is moving to Denton, Texas. Some of the people are going with it, but most are not. In any cases the constant departures seem strange and the task that they want me to perform for them at a distance demands a new pattern of thought and constant learning.

While I have often thought that what people have learned to expect from me is to be able to do something I have never done before, it does seem like the time to do it is shorter than usual. When you add in the fact that the things I am supporting are new to the people using them, it is clear that adaptability is going to be tested.

Luckily, the main work will be doing things that I did so many times I wrote scripts to do the repetitive work. From what I have heard, this is like the military: long periods of boredom punctuated by moments of shear terror.
